ABSTRACT

As the 2002-2003 academic year got underway, many public colleges and universities found themselves wrestling with mid-year state funding reductions, significant enrollment growth, and pressure to hold the line on tuition. With unfunded enrollment mounting and another bleak budget year on the horizon, states and their higher education institutions once again faced the unpleasant reality of increasing student charges. The economic downturn and resulting budget crunches also spell trouble for federal and state student aid programs that provide access to higher education opportunity. The Pell Grant program faces a shortfall of $2 billion, and a number of states have cut their need-based grant efforts or are struggling to maintain current funding levels. This challenging scenario is made more complex by changes in leadership in the U.S. Senate and the upcoming reauthorization of the federal Higher Education Act. Resident undergraduate tuition and fees at public 4-year institutions rose 9.1% for 2002-2003, the largest single-year increase in almost a decade. Despite this increase, more than half of the states reported undergraduate tuition and fee increases at or below the national average. Room and board charges increased at the rate of 5.4% for 2002-2003. Over the past few years, the cost of attending college as a percentage of family income has stabilized for those in the middle- or high-income brackets, but this percentage remains particularly high for low-income families, at about 60% of annual income. Financial aid to postsecondary students increased approximately 11.5% in current dollars between 2000-2001 and 2001-2002. The year ahead will be filled with difficult choices for policymakers, higher education leaders, and students and their families. Two appendixes list student charges at member institutions of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges. (Contains 7 tables and 49 endnotes.) (SLD)

Overview

As the 2002-2003 academic year got under way, many public colleges and universities found themselves wrestling with mid-year state funding reductions, significant enrollment growth, and pressure to hold the line on tuition. With unfunded enrollment mounting and another bleak budget year on the horizon, states and their higher education institutions once again faced the unpleasant reality of increasing student charges.

Moreover, the economic downturn and resulting budget crunches also spell trouble for federal and state student aid programs that provide access to higher education opportunity for millions of American students. The federal Pell Grant program currently faces a shortfall of $2 billion, and a number of states have cut their need-based grant efforts or are struggling to maintain current funding levels. The result is a “double whammy” for those most at risk of missing out on the opportunity for college, at a point when these groups are most economically vulnerable.

This challenging scenario is made more complex by two major developments in the policymaking arena:

The 2002 elections brought a change in leadership in the U.S. Senate, as well as the arrival of 24 new governors and more than 1,850 new state legislators. If the campaign messages of many successful candidates were any indication, college affordability will be very much on their minds as they take office.

The reauthorization of the federal Higher Education Act (HEA) will begin in earnest in 2003, and both parties have already signaled that student finance issues will garner a great deal of attention.

Preserving broad access to higher education in such an environment will be no small task. With more than one million additional students bound for state colleges and universities over the next decade, however, it is a task that campus leaders and state and federal policymakers must be prepared to face.

Highlights

Tuition and Fees

Resident undergraduate tuition and fees at public four-year institutions rose 9.1 percent ($344) for 2002-2003, the largest single-year increase in almost a decade.<sup>1</sup> [Figure1]

Despite this increase, more than half of the states (31) reported undergraduate tuition and fee increases at or below the national average.<sup>2</sup>

Source: The College Board, Trends in College Pricing 2002.

Student Charges and Financial Aid

The majority of public four-year institutions (60.3 percent) still charge less than $4,000 in resident undergraduate tuition and fees.

Room and Board

Room and board charges increased at a rate of 5.4 percent for 2002-2003. This is almost a full percentage point below the rate of increase for the previous year (6.1 percent).<sup>3</sup>

Trends and Indicators

Over the past few years, the cost of attending college as a percentage of family income has stabilized for those in the middle- or high-income brackets. The percentage of family income required remains particularly high for low-income families, however, for whom the cost of attending a public four-year institution represents more than 60 percent of annual income.<sup>4</sup>

Financial Aid

Financial aid to postsecondary students in the United States increased approximately 11.5 percent in current dollars between 2000-2001 and 2001-2002, growing to almost $90 billion. Federal and state aid expenditures increased 10.2 and 5.9 percent respectively during the year. Institutional and other grant expenditures increased 11.2 percent between 2000-2001 and 2001-2002.<sup>5</sup>

Loans constituted 54.0 percent of all postsecondary student aid in 2001-02, while grants made up 39.0

percent, and work-study/tax credits accounted for the remaining 7.0 percent. This represents a significant shift from a decade earlier, when grants accounted for 49.3 percent of aid and loans only 48.1 percent.<sup>6</sup> [Figure 2]

Since 1989-90, non-need-based state grant aid has more than doubled as percentage of state student aid (11.2 percent in 1989-90 to 23.7 percent in 2000-2001). [Figure 3]

State Policy

Growth in state higher education appropriations slumped to near zero in fiscal year 2003 (FY03), as many states continued to experience declining revenues. To fill growing budget gaps and to address substantial enrollment growth, colleges and universities turned to tuition and fees, underscoring the inverse relationship between state funding and student charges.<sup>7</sup> [Figures 4 and 5]

"Other" consists of a variety of revenue sources including: endowment income, federal and state grants and contracts, private gifts, grants and contracts; as well as revenues from hospitals, auxiliary enterprises and the sale and servicing of educational activities, and independent operations.

Student Charges and Financial Aid

Many of the returning and incoming governors have named college affordability as a key higher education policy issue for their administrations. Some have indicated that they will focus on tuition policy, while others have expressed a desire to strengthen state student aid programs.

Findings

Tuition and Fees

Average tuition and fees for resident undergraduate students at public four-year colleges and universities increased 9.1 percent from 2001-2002 to 2002-2003 ($3,766 to $4,110). [Table 1] Resident undergraduate tuition at AASCU member institutions* rose 8.4 percent ($3,403 to $3,690) over this period [Table 2], while resident undergraduate tuition at NASULGC member institutions** increased 9.2 percent ($4,021 to $4,392) over the same period [Table 3].

The one-year increase in tuition and fees for non-resident undergraduate students shows a similar pattern. Average tuition and fees for non-resident undergraduates rose 8.7 percent ($10,404 to $11,309)

at all public four-year colleges and universities from 2001-2002 to 2002-2003. [Table 1] At AASCU institutions, the increase totaled 8.8 percent ($9,004 to $9,799) over the period [Table 2], while non-resident undergraduate tuition at NASULGC institutions rose an average of 8.7 percent ($11,396 to $12,391) over the same period. [Table 3]

Graduate tuition and fees posted somewhat lower one-year percentage increases. Resident tuition and fees for master's students at public four-year institutions rose 6.7 percent ($4,702 to $5,018) from 2001-2002 to 2002-2003. [Table 1] At AASCU institutions, the increase was 6.6 percent ($3,823 to $4,074) over this period. [Table 2] For doctoral students, resident tuition and fees grew 7.9 percent at public four-year institutions ($4,833 to $5,217), and 7.9 percent ($3,901 to $4,210) at AASCU institutions. [Tables 1 and 2] At NASULGC institutions, the average rate of increase for master's students was 7.9

percent ($5,347 to $5,769) and 7.9 for doctoral students ($5,358 to $5,783) over this period. [Table 3]

Three states posted average 2002-2003 tuition/fee increases at or below the year-over-year increase in the Consumer Price Index (1.5 percent for September 2001–September 2002). Additionally, another nine states reported tuition and fee increases of less than 5 percent. Twenty states, however, saw average tuition and fee increases above 10 percent for 2002-2003. [Table 4]

More than half of public four-year colleges and universities (60.3 percent) charged less than $4,000 in resident undergraduate tuition and fees for 2002-2003. Nearly two-thirds of AASCU institutions (65.8 percent) charged less than $4,000 in resident undergraduate tuition and fees, and almost two-thirds (64.4 percent) of full-time undergraduates at AASCU institutions paid less than $4,000 in resident undergraduate tuition and fees. [Tables 5 and 6] For NASULGC institutions, more than half (53.5 percent) charge less than $4,000 in tuition and fees, and just under half of all full-time resident undergraduates at those institutions (49.4 percent) paid less than $4,000 in resident undergraduate tuition and fees. [Table 7]

Room and Board

Room and board charges increased at a similar rate during this period. At public four-year institutions, average room and board rose from $5,253 in 2001-2002 to $5,539 in 2002-2003, a 5.4 percent increase. [Table 1] AASCU institutions posted a one-year increase of 5.8 percent ($4,856 to $5,139), while NASULGC institutions posted an increase of 5.5 percent for the same period ($5,524 to $5,830). [Tables 2 and 3]

Trends and Indicators

The average tuition and fee increase of 9.1 percent in 2002-2003 stands above previous years' increases of 7.1 percent for 2001-2002 and 4.6 percent for 2000-2001. The 5.4 percent increase in room and board charges represents a slight decrease from the 6.1 percent increase of the previous year. [Figure 1]

From 1992-1993 to 2002-2003, tuition and fees at public four-year colleges and universities increased

38.4 percent (from $2,949 to $4,081) in constant (inflation-adjusted) dollars. Tuition and fees at private four-year institutions also rose 38.4 percent (from $13,202 to $18,273) in constant dollars during the same period.<sup>8</sup>

Room and board charges at public four-year institutions rose 21.9 percent in constant dollars between 1992-1993 and 2002-2003, increasing from $4,294 to $5,235. Room and board charges at private institutions rose 19.0 percent in constant dollars during the same period, from $5,074 to $6,039.<sup>9</sup>

The price of college attendance at four-year public institutions, as a percentage of family income, has remained relatively steady for middle and high-income families since the early 1980s. However, student charges as a percentage of family income escalated significantly for low-income families throughout the 1980s and early 1990s. While the percentage of family income has leveled off over the last four to five years, low-income families still spend about 60 percent of their income, compared to less than 20 percent for middle- and upper-income families.<sup>10</sup>

Analysis and Policy Implications

With revenues down and many state budgets out of balance, tuition caps and rollbacks are quickly becoming a thing of the past. With across-the-board budget cuts, many governors and lawmakers are being forced to concede that higher education must recoup some of its lost revenue through increased tuition and fees. In the coming year, colleges and universities can expect to see more of the same as states continue to trim budgets and services. At the same time, rising access demands will severely test institutions' financial and human resources.

Resident Tuition and Undocumented Aliens

In recent years, policymakers in a number of states have been working to address the issue of in-state tuition for undocumented alien students. Their efforts have been complicated by federal law, which currently prohibits states from providing a postsecondary education benefit to an undocumented alien student if a U.S. citizen is not eligible for the same benefit. As a result, many states have argued that they have been unable to make allowances for these students to pursue a higher education at in-state rates. Currently, four states permit unauthorized alien students to become eligible for in-state tuition, and in 2003, more states are likely to consider similar measures.

Enacted Legislation

California—Students who attend a California high school for at least three years, graduate from a California high school and sign an affidavit pledging to apply for permanent residency can be considered for resident tuition by all California community colleges, as well as the institutions of the University of California and California State University systems.<sup>11</sup>

New York—Lawmakers passed a measure that will allow alien students who have attended a New York high school for at least two years, graduated and applied to attend a state college within five years of graduation to be eligible to receive in-state tuition rates at the City University of New York and State University of New York system institutions.<sup>12</sup>

Texas—Undocumented alien students who have lived in the state for more than three years and have signed an agreement to seek status as a legal resident qualify for in-state college tuition rates at all public state institutions.<sup>13</sup>

Utah—Lawmakers passed a bill that would require unauthorized alien students to have lived in the state for at least three years, attended and graduated from a Utah high school, and signed an affidavit to the institution agreeing to clarify their residency status. The bill was signed under the condition that federal legislation must pass first. The state attorney general issued an opinion that says the state does not have to wait on federal legislation to remove the restrictions and unauthorized alien students may be able to start paying in-state tuition as early as this year.<sup>14</sup>

Considering or Pending Policy/Legislation

Colorado—Lawmakers

are considering a measure that would make undocumented alien students eligible for in-state tuition if they are academically qualified and meet residency requirements.<sup>15</sup>

Georgia—The #### University System

of Georgia plans to modify system policy to allow undocumented Mexican immigrants living in the state to pay in-state tuition through funds set aside to assist athletes and outstanding students from other states.<sup>16</sup>

Illinois—Currently, some of the state's public colleges

charge undocumented alien students in-state tuition, while others charge them the higher tuition that nonresidents are required to pay. Several Hispanic lawmakers have pushed for a law that would allow all undocumented aliens to pay in-state rates. Supporters of the measure failed to get a similar bill through the Legislature last year, but are expected to try again.<sup>17</sup>

Maryland—Latino advocates have crafted an ambitious agenda for the General Assembly, which includes a goal to allow undocumented alien students who attend Maryland schools to pay in-state tuition rates at state colleges and universities.<sup>18</sup>

Massachusetts—State legislators will consider a bill in 2003 that would allow undocumented alien students to pay in-state tuition and help those students to obtain legal residency.<sup>19</sup>

Minnesota—Lawmakers here are likely to propose legislation that would allow undocumented alien students to pay in-state tuition rates.<sup>20</sup>

New Jersey—It is uncertain whether the General Assembly will consider a bill offered in 2002 that would allow undocumented alien students to pay in-state tuition rates.<sup>21</sup>

North Carolina—The General Assembly plans to study whether unauthorized alien students should be allowed to pay resident tuition rates.<sup>22</sup>

Virginia—Governor Warner will form a task force to study whether state colleges should bar illegal immigrants and report those already enrolled to federal authorities, following an opinion by the state's attorney general that undocumented alien

students should neither be admitted nor offered resident tuition rates.<sup>23</sup>

Washington—Lawmakers are expected to debate legislation that would allow unauthorized alien students who have been living in the U.S. illegally and who have graduated from high schools in the state to pay resident tuition rates at public institutions.<sup>24</sup>

Wisconsin—In August 2001, Governor McCallum considered, but ultimately vetoed, a bill similar to California's on the ground that it conflicted with federal law. There is no word regarding pending legislation in the state.<sup>25</sup>

Looking Ahead—Tuition

Alaska—The University of Alaska Board of Regents has approved a 10 percent increase in tuition for the 2003-2004 academic year.<sup>26</sup>

California—Governor Davis released a proposed budget for 2003-2004 that includes cuts of $300 million and $326 million at the University of California and the California State University respectively. If the budget is adopted, in-state undergraduate students at University of California institutions could see their fees increase by $795, to $4,629. These charges would be in addition to mid-year increases approved by the Board of Regents in December.

Students at California State University institutions could see their fees increase by $394 (25 percent), to $1,968. This increase would follow a $144 mid-year increase the CSU Board of Trustees approved in December.<sup>27</sup>

Connecticut—The Connecticut State Universities Board of Trustees recently approved a 14.5 percent increase for state universities' tuition and fees in 2003-2004, as well as increases in housing and food service fees.<sup>28</sup>

Iowa—Following an 18.5 percent increase in base tuition for 2002-2003, the Iowa Board of Regents recently approved a tuition hike of 20 percent for 2003-2004. This will be the third consecutive year of double-digit increases for Iowa students.<sup>29</sup>

Maryland—University System of Maryland Regents authorized a 4 percent tuition increase for 2003-2004 in August 2002. In early 2003, Regents warned students of possible mid-year tuition increases in the 2002-2003 academic year. In preparation for another round of deep budget cuts, Regents have said increases of up to 5 percent may be necessary to offset the mid-year budget cuts.<sup>30</sup>

Nevada—Regents have approved a 15 percent tuition increase for the 2003-2005 biennium.<sup>31</sup>

New York—It is widely speculated that SUNY will raise tuition in 2003-2004, the first increase in seven years.<sup>32</sup>

Oregon—The state's Board of Higher Education has authorized mid-year increases ranging from $50.00 to $187.50 if voters fail to approve a temporary income tax increase in late January.<sup>33</sup>

Utah—The Board of Regents has approved a 4.5 percent resident tuition increase for 2003-2004. In addition to the Regents approved increase, institutions have also announced their proposed second-tier increases for 2003-2004. The proposed increases, ranging from 1.5 to 19 percent, will be discussed at the Regents January meeting.<sup>34</sup>

Virginia—Overall, public institutions in the state averaged a 9 percent tuition increase in 2002-2003. However, the University of Virginia and Virginia Tech recently adopted mid-year increases to offset state budget cuts.<sup>35</sup>

Looking Ahead—New/Re-elected Governors' Positions on Tuition/Fees and Financial Aid<sup>36</sup>

Arkansas—Governor Huckabee (R) wants to increase the number of state scholarships available to Arkansas students.

Colorado—Governor Owens (R) plans to focus on college affordability and believes that tuition should not rise faster than the rate of inflation or growth in personal income. Owens would shield state financial-aid programs from budget cuts.

Georgia—Governor Perdue (R) proposes an amendment to the state constitution ensuring that lottery revenue is spent only on the HOPE scholarship and pre-kindergarten programs.

Hawaii—Governor Lingle (R) supports giving complete autonomy to the Board of Regents, including independence in determining tuition and fees, and in bargaining with university employees.

Illinois—Governor Blagojevich (D) sees a need to rein in skyrocketing tuition at state colleges.

Iowa—Governor Vilsack (D) would like to re-establish the state-sponsored work-study program for students cut two years ago. He has also proposed interest-free loans to students who agree to live and work in Iowa for at least five years after they graduate.

Maine—Governor Baldacci (D) believes that tuition at the state's public colleges and universities should be reduced to the national average.

Maryland—Governor Ehrlich (R) wants to expand student aid in order to help lower college dropout rates, particularly among minority students.

Michigan—Governor Granholm (D) wants to establish a Great Lakes Scholars program to provide more scholarships to low and moderate-income Michigan students. This program would be funded in part by contributions from private donors and businesses throughout the state.

New Mexico—Governor Richardson (D) sees a need to stabilize tuition increases at state colleges.

Oklahoma—Governor Henry (D) wants to direct revenues from a proposed state lottery in order to finance higher education programs.

Oregon—Governor Kulongoski (D) would like to increase access to college, especially for financially needy students.

Pennsylvania—Governor Rendell (D) wants to explore new ways for students to finance their postsecondary education. His proposals include expanding the state's technology-scholarship and tax-credit programs, and improving the state grant program, which awards financial aid to residents attending any public or private college in Pennsylvania.

South Dakota—Governor Rounds (R) would like to see the creation of a tuition-forgiveness program for students who stay in South Dakota for five years after graduation and take a public-service job.

Tennessee—Governor Bredesen (D) has proposed the establishment of need-based, lottery-funded scholarships for students to attend public or private institutions. The state's voters approved a lottery measure on the November ballot.

Texas—Governor Perry (R) has proposed a $5 million increase in appropriations to the state's work-study program. Perry would also like to establish a state-supported loan program that offers students up to $5,000 more in aid for college each year.

Wisconsin—Governor Doyle (D) would like to create a scholarship program that would encourage students to pursue technology majors in college.

Looking Ahead—Tuition Policy Changes

Oregon—A number of public university presidents continue to pursue greater administrative autonomy for their campuses. While they are no longer asking for individual governing boards, the presidents will ask the State Board of Higher Education to approve a plan in which they have a greater role in setting tuition and enrollment and have more control over earnings. Currently, state legislators limit the amount universities can earn from non-state sources, including tuition, and then the state board sets tuition. Under the proposal, the state board would allow institutions to set tuition within an approved range. Institutions would have to use a portion of the tuition revenue to subsidize tuition for low-income students. Campuses would also be able to limit enrollment if the money they received from the state did not cover all new students.<sup>37</sup>

In a plan to increase efficiency on campus and raise tuition revenue, the University of Oregon is offering a 15 percent discount on classes offered after 3 p.m. By implementing this differential tuition policy, the university hopes to make better use of its classroom space. Students who take the cheaper classes have seen their tuition grow by only 1 percent, while those in other classes have faced a 9 percent tuition increase.<sup>38</sup>

Maryland—The University System of Maryland has created a task force that will study the state's tuition policies and look for ways to increase tuition and student aid in light of expected increases in enrollment, from both resident and non-resident students.<sup>39</sup>

Missouri—In a surprise ruling, a St. Louis County judge found that the University of Missouri System had violated an 1889 law that stated "all youths, residents of Missouri, over the age of 16 years," could attend the University of Missouri without having to pay tuition. The judge found that the university had been in violation of the law between 1986 and 1998 (when the law was changed) because it had changed its fee schedule from a nominal flat rate to a per credit rate. The judge held the per-credit fee to be synonymous with tuition. If the ruling is upheld, the university may have to refund as much as $450 million to almost 200,000 current and former students. Such a payout could be devastating to a system that saw its $1.87 billion budget cut by 10 percent this year and expects further cuts in the coming year.<sup>40</sup>

West Virginia—Early morning and summer classes could cost less than more popular courses as West Virginia University looks to differentiate tuition rates based on class time and program. The Board of Governors has encouraged the university to explore such options in order to raise revenue and reduce costs as the university faces potential budget cuts of 10 percent in fiscal year 2004. The university is also exploring the idea of offering discounts for less popular courses, as well as shifting to a per-credit pricing structure.<sup>41</sup>

Wisconsin—University of Wisconsin System leaders have requested that the right to set tuition for resident undergraduate students be returned to the Board of Regents. The Regents had the authority to determine all UW tuition until the 1999-2001 budget, when the Legislature assumed authority for setting resident undergraduate tuition. The Regents currently have the right to set tuition for graduate and out-of-state students. The Regents also asked to keep interest earnings on tuition revenue, retain proceeds from the sale of property, and be allowed to set application fees and create new positions that would be funded by program revenue. The requests are part of the system's biennial budget requests for 2003-2005.<sup>42</sup> increased. In 2001-2002, students received $90 billion in aid, an increase of 11.5 percent from a year earlier. While overall aid has increased, loans continue to make up a majority of federal aid. In 2001-2002, loans represented 54 percent of total student aid, compared with just 47 percent 10 years earlier.

The influence of the federal Pell Grant program continues to grow. The maximum award has increased from $3,300 in 2000-2001 to $3,750 in 2001-2002 to $4,000 in 2002-2003. The number of recipients, however, has increased so rapidly that current appropriations are not adequate to cover program costs. In June 2002, the Department of Education estimated that there was a shortfall of $1.8 billion in the program, which has continued to grow as college enrollments increase in response to the economic downturn.

State Aid

State merit-based aid programs continue to gain in popularity, amid much criticism that the scholarships give significant assistance to higher income students, as opposed to those who cannot afford to attend college. In a recent study by the Civil Rights Project at Harvard University, researchers found that scholarship programs modeled after Georgia's HOPE program primarily assisted students who would have attended college without assistance and were of little help to low-income and minority students. According to the report, in 2001 states set aside one-quarter of student aid funds for merit-based programs, compared with just 11 percent in 1991. Proponents of merit-based aid programs argue that such programs do help needy students, citing statistics that show states such as Georgia providing more aid to low-income students after the adoption of a merit-based aid program.<sup>43</sup>

Student Aid

Federal Aid

As tuition and enrollment continue to rise at the nation's colleges and universities, student aid has also

In the States

Illinois—Former Governor Ryan cut $38.3 million from the state's Monetary Award Program (MAP) scholarships. As a result, 7,000 low-income, fifth-year students will not be receiving aid, after being told early in 2002 that they had been approved for a MAP award. In total, about 21,000 needy students may not receive grants in 2003-2004, according to the Illinois Student Assistance Commission. The commission has criticized lawmakers for cutting funding for needy students while fully funding the Merit Recognition Scholarship Program, a merit-based program that costs the state $5.4 million.<sup>44</sup>

Indiana—Because Indiana is one of a few states that links student aid with tuition levels at its public colleges and universities, the state would need to increase funding for its financial aid programs 35 percent ($102 million) in the 2003-2005 biennium to keep up with rising tuition.

Officials are considering capping the amount of aid given to students at public institutions and lowering the current limit on aid given to students at private colleges. Under the plan, aid would be capped at $4,700 for those enrolled at a public institution. Critics are concerned that the proposal would deny thousands of low-income students necessary financial aid. Higher education officials note that the proposal is just one idea and that the state Legislature will make the final decision as to how much funding will be given for financial aid in the 2003-2005 biennium.<sup>45</sup>

Michigan—In November, voters rejected a proposal that would have transferred the funding for the state's Michigan Merit Award to health care programs. The scholarship awards $2,500 to students who perform well on the state's standardized test, the Michigan Educational Assessment Program (MEAP).<sup>46</sup>

Oregon—About 21,000 students will see their Oregon Opportunity Grants reduced as a result of $1.6 million in legislative cuts. The grant, the only state-supported financial aid program in Oregon, assists low-income residents with college expenses. While students already received their checks for the fall term, payments made in the winter and spring will be cut. Final details have not yet been made available, but public university students can expect grant reductions of about $250.<sup>47</sup>

Tennessee—Voters decided in November to allow the state Legislature to establish a lottery, with a portion of the proceeds going to scholarships. Lawmakers and the Tennessee Higher Education Commission are currently discussing how funds would be allocated if a lottery is established.<sup>48</sup>

West Virginia—The state's Higher Education Policy Commission will ask lawmakers for an additional $5 million to expand the number of higher education grants next year. Officials are also considering dropping the current academic requirements tied to the grants. Currently, the state provides grants to 10,702 students; however, there is a waiting list of almost 600 students who qualify for the grant but did not receive it because of insufficient state funding.<sup>49</sup>

Conclusion

The year ahead will be filled with difficult choices for policymakers, higher education leaders, and students and their families. These choices will range from broad and far-reaching decisions of where students and institutions rank among state and federal funding priorities, to individual decisions of whether or where to attend college, and how to cover the costs. Whether "big picture" or personal, deliberations at all levels are made even tougher by a sputtering economy, institutional capacity challenges, and rising student debt levels. The results of these deliberations, however, will have a lasting impact on college opportunity as our nation faces the realities of the new economy.

The ongoing discussion and debate regarding college affordability should focus on two key points:

The best interests of students and their families should be the overriding concern in formulating and evaluating higher education finance policy.

Policy must promote student success as well as access. Desired improvements in student outcomes will not occur without addressing both.

The emerging policy landscape will require unprecedented creativity and flexibility from leaders at the campus, state and federal levels. At the same time, the need to clearly and firmly articulate policy priorities has never been greater. Millions of students and their families will anxiously watch as policymakers attempt to balance these demands.
